Graphics in the form of a series of living images rotated to create the illusion of moving images presented as a form of entertainment. The illusion of a series of images creates continuous motion in the form of video. Film is often referred to as a movie or a moving picture. Film is a modern and popular art form designed for commercial and entertainment purposes. Filmmaking has now become a popular industry around the world where cinemas are always waiting for feature films. Movies are made in two main ways. The first is the technique of recording and filming with film cameras. In this method, images or objects are photographed. The second one uses traditional animation techniques. This method is performed using computer graphics animation or CGI techniques. Both can also be combined with other techniques and visual effects. Filming usually takes quite a long time. It also requires everyone's desk, from director, producer, editor, wardrobe, visual effects, and more. Definition and Definition of Film/Movie Actors playing roles in a film are referred to as actors (male) or actresses (female). There is also the term extras, used to support characters with multiple roles in the film. This sets them apart from the main actors who have increasingly larger roles. As an actor and actress, he must have good acting talent to suit the theme of the film he is starring in. In some scenes, the actor's role may be replaced by a stuntman or a stuntman. The existence of a stuntman is important to replace actors who perform difficult and extreme scenes usually found in action movies. Videos can also be used to convey specific messages from the filmmaker. Some industries also use films to express and represent their symbols and culture. Filming is also a form of expression, thoughts, ideas, concepts, feelings and moods of the person visualized in the film. This itself is mostly fiction, though some are based on true stories or actual stories. There are also original and live action documentaries or biopics that tell the character's story. There are many other popular genre films: action films, horror films, comedies, romantic films, fantasy films, thrillers, dramas, sci-fi films, crime films, documentaries and many more. This is a little information about the definition of film or film. Information taken from various sources and references. Hope this can be helpful. âââ TV-FILM âââ The first television programs of the 20th century were experimental, sporadic programs that could only be seen within a very short distance of a transmission tower. for the 1930s. Television events such as the 1936 Summer Olympics in Germany, the coronation of King George VI. 1934 in the United Kingdom and David Sarnoff's famous performance at the 1939 New York World's Fair in the United States contributed to the growth of the medium, but World War II halted development until the end of the war. 19440 World MOVIE inspired many Americans to buy their first television, and in 1948 the popular Texaco Star Theater radio show became the first weekly television entertainment show hosted by Milton "Mr. Burle" Berle. TV", and demonstrate that the media is a reliable, modern form of entertainment that can attract advertisers. The first live national television broadcast in the United States was on September 4, 1951, when President Harry Truman's speech at the Japan Peace Treaty Conference in San Francisco was broadcast over AT&T's transcontinental cable and microwave networks. in local markets. The first national color broadcast (1954 Rose Parade Tournament) took place on January 1, 1954 in the United States. Over the next decade, most network broadcasts and nearly all local programming continued to be in black and white. Colorwas announced in the fall of 1965, during which more than half of all network prime-time programming would be broadcast in color. The first full-color season came just a year later. In 19402, the final break between network daytime broadcasts was switched to color, resulting in the network's first all-color season. • Formats and Genres • See also: List of Genres • Film and TV Formats and Genres Television broadcasts are more diverse than most other forms of media because they can present different formats and genres. A program can be fictional (as in comedy and drama) or non-fictional (as in documentaries, news and reality television). It can be topical (as in local news and some TV movies) or historical (as in many documentaries and feature films). They can be primarily educational, educational, or entertaining, such as sitcoms and game shows. [citation needed] A dramatic program usually consists of actors portraying characters in a historical or contemporary setting. The program follows their lives and adventures. Before the 1980s, shows (with the exception of soap opera-type series) generally remained static, with no story arcs, and the main characters and premise changed little. [citation needed] If there were changes in the characters' lives during an episode, they were usually undone at the end. Because of this, the episodes can be broadcast in any order. [citation needed] Since the 1980s, many MOVIES have featured incremental changes in plot, characters, or both. For example, Hill Street Blues and St. Elsewhere were two of the first American prime-time TV dramas to have this type of dramatic structure [4] [better source needed], while the later MOVIE Babylon 5 is another example of this type. structure, as the predetermined story overflew its intended five-season run. [citation needed] "DC1" was announced as televisionmost of the income of the big media companies than the film. Some have also noticed an improvement in the quality of some television programs. On DC1, Oscar-winning director Steven Soderbergh commented on the ambiguity and complexity of character and storytelling. "I think those qualities are now on television, and people who want to see stories that have those qualities are watching television."
