Roger Staubach, Touchdown Passer Launcher Winner for any Drew Pearson receiver during a NFL playoff game between Dallas Cowboys and Minnesota Vikings on December 28, 1975, a Hail Mary pass is a pass Very long forward, typically done in despair, with an exceptionally small chance of achieving a conclusion. Due to the difficulty of a conclusion with this pass, it refers to the catholic prayer "Hail Mary" for the divine aid. [1] The expression returns at least for the DA © Each of 1930, when it was publicly used by Elmer Layden and Jim Crowley, two former Notre Dame members struggling the four Knights of Irish. Originally, meaning any type of game of despair, a bird pass Mary gradually came to denote a low probability pass of low probability, typically of the "alley-oop" variety, tempted at the end of a half when a team is very far From the end zone to execute a more conventional piece, implying that it would take a miracle to the piece to succeed. For more than 40 years, the use of the term was widely confined to Notre Dame and other catholic universities. [1] The term became widespread after a NFL playoff game between Dallas Cowboys and Minnesota Vikings on December 28, 1975, when the quarterback Cowboys Roger Staubach said about his winning touchdown passage to a broad Receiver, Drew Pearson, "I closed my eyes and said a Hail Mary." [2] Origins Crowley often told the story of a game between Notre Dame and Tech Georgia on October 28, 1922, in which Irish fighting players said that bird maria prayers together before marking each of the touchdowns, before winning the game 13 à € "3. According to Crowley, it was one of the team's linemen, noble Kizer (a Presbyterian), who suggested Pray before the first touchdown, which occurred in a room and goal in the line Georgia Tech 6-yard during the second quarter. Quarterback Harry Stuhldreher, another of the knights, played a quick passage over the middle for Paul Castner for the score. . The ritual was repeated before a third and GOLF Ear, again in the line of 6 yards of Tech, in the fourth quarter. This time, Stuhldreher ran to a touchdown, who sealed the victory to Notre Dame. After the game, Kizer exclaimed Crowley: "Say, that Hail Mary is the best piece we have." Crowley related this story many times in public speeches from the DA © Each of 1930. [1] on November 2, 1935, with 32 seconds remaining in the so-called "Sécúlo game" between the state of Ohio and Notre Dame, Bill Irish Wewback Bill Shakespeare found Wayne Milner receiver for a 19-yard touchdown, winning. Notre Dame Head Coach Elmer Layden, who played the 1922 Georgia technology game, then called a "Hail Mary" move. [1] An early appearance of the term was in an associated press history on the next 1941 orange bowl among the Bulldogs of the State of Mississippi and the Hoyas Georgetown. The piece appeared in several newspapers, including December 31, 1940, Daytona Beach Morning Journal under the headline, "Orange Bowl: [Georgetown] Hoyas PÁqe FÅ © 'Hail Mary' Pass. As the article explained, "A' Hail Mary "passes, in the Washington Eleven conversation, is the one who is played with a prayer because the chances against the conclusion are great." During an NBC transmission in 1963, Staubach, then a Navy quarterback, described a passing game during the victory of his team on Michigan that year as "Hail Mary Play." He struggled to escape a passing race, almost getting less than 20 meters behind the scrimmage line before completing a desperation to go through a gain of a yard. [1] Examples see also: Hail Marys list in American football, no doubt, the most memorable and repeated Hail Mary Pass happened on November 23, 1984, in a game now known as "float". [3] A College was losing to Miami (FL) with six seconds, when his quarterback Doug Floie played a 52-yard touchdown to Gerard Phelan, getting mainly because Miami's secondary was on the goal line to keep the receivers in front of them without without without A postcard behind them. Miami's defense was based on the assumption that the five-step floie nine inches can not throw the ball until the end area, but Floatie hit Phelan in Stride against a flatfooted defense yard in the final zone. [4] To commemorate the piece, a floating statue in his Mary Pass Pose of Hail was revealed outside the state of Alumni at Boston College on November 7, 2008.
