Planning a Fast and Furious movie must be hard. The high-octane stunts are expected to outdo its predecessors in automotive action and beyond. We didn't think these videos could find new creative ways to destroy cars, but during the first action trailer, we were wrong for a few seconds when a wrecking ball hit several cars and went flying through the air like skittles. The unique stunt is part of a nighttime chase scene filmed in Berlin where Dom and his crew steal an EMP and are chased by a fleet of vehicles. A behind-the-scenes video shows how this devastating feat was accomplished. Unlike some of the more fanciful stunts in the show, it's all for real. Director F. Gary Gray and stunt coordinators built a giant steel ball to demolish the film. It weighed 32,000 pounds and collided with moving vehicles at 40 miles per hour. Suffice it to say that he caused serious damage - after this deed, little was left of the cars smashed beyond recognition. The Fate of the Furious hits theaters on April 14, so we'll soon find out if it takes the action to absurd new levels. We'll probably remember this scene as a visual metaphor for the moment when Fast and Furious 2 inevitably breaks box office records. Soap2day is a free ad-free movie streaming site.
