She was sure her new friends were listening.” Copyright Akiko Miyakoshi, 2015, courtesy of Kids Can Press. Personalized mugs also make fantastic presents for friends and family. “My dear, did you come all this way on your own?” asked Grandma, stepping inside.” Kikko could not see the animals anywhere. Some issues include wages, medical care, and education for women tea workers. “Has it always been here? How the other half live, eh! Finally, today, here is alarming news from Pinsent Masons - “ Workers name their price for Company secrets ” - which I guess is an increased problem in the present economic downturn. The long table they crowd around is laden with pies, bowls of fruit, vases of flowers, and of course teapots and teacups. She told then her name and why she was in the forest. Taking Kikko’s hand, the lamb led her into the house. They welcome the bewildered and timorous Kikko, take her coat, serve her tea, and make her the occasion’s special guest. But—he wasn’t her father at all!” He was a bear! Copyright Akiko Miyakoshi, 2015, courtesy of Kids Can Press. “Slice by slice they assembled a new pie on a pretty plate. The straightforward narrative offers just the right amount of familiarity for young readers to allow them to be fully charmed by the magical elements that provide surprise and suspense. International Tea Day Activity Decorate Your Own Mug It’s fun to drink tea (or hot chocolate—shhh!) from a mug you’ve designed yourself. This presents us with quite a challenge, especially in the belt tightening environment that now prevails, given our ambition to drive up membership, and it suggests we must prioritise development and implementation of our corporate membership scheme. A lady-lamb in a pea coat, carrying a purse, asks in a kind voice whether Kikko is there for the tea party too, then gently takes the girl’s hand and leads her into the house. The animals said they would come too. When Kikko saw all of the animals gathered there, she couldn’t believe it. “You’re never alone in the woods,” Kikko answered, smiling. A little lamb approaching the house found Kikko looking through the window and asked if she were there for the tea party. The woods rang with music, talking, laughing, and singing as the group “paraded to Grandma’s house.” When they reached Grandma’s house, the animals encouraged Kikko to go to the door. To be human is to sometimes slip, then wish for a way to undo our mishaps and magically fix our mistakes. The meeting was overwhelmingly in favour of maintaining “Socitm” as the master brand, but with a slight change of emphasis - the “Society of Information and Technology Management”. Devastated, she picks up the box and runs after her father, following him to a strange big house she hadn’t noticed before. They will also find comfort in realizing that even when travels become hard, they can still discover wondrous things and that friends and help are always available - sometimes where they least expect it. At first Kikko offers the only color on the pages with her red cap and skirt and yellow hair. There was a view that most public sector employees are reluctant to pay their own Socitm membership fees because they know that their employers pay their managers’ (true, I believe, in most cases) and, not unreasonably, expect the same treatment, even ‘though they are happy to pay membership fees to other organisations, such as the BCS. Little ones will be entranced by the warm welcome Kikko receives at the splendid and well-attended tea party. Copyright Akiko Miyakoshi, 2015, courtesy of Kids Can Press. Kikko wondered. Of course, winter is a perfect time to enjoy steaming cups of tea - maybe with a cookie or two! By Akiko Miyakoshi Because snow had fallen overnight Kikko’s father was off to her grandmother’s house to shovel the walk. I have to confess to some frustration at the number of times colleagues declared themselves uninformed (or words to that effect) about issues under discussion - as we have striven to keep all our membership up to speed with Society developments (as in this Blog, for example). The “meat” of the meeting was in discussing papers, presented by Adrian, positing a number of questions on membership structure. “‘We’re about to serve the tea,’ said the rabbit. As Kikko struggles to make sense of the strangeness unfolding before her, another reality-warping creature approaches her. At the story’s heart is a gentle taunt at the line between what is real and what is imagined — a line we cross daily in ways minute and monumental by virtue of continually constructing the thing we call reality. I was reminded of what I had wanted to raise at the last meeting, but forgot - that, given the pressures on members’ time, we aspire to ensure they are supported by paid Socitm officers, when representing the Society in meetings, who ensure that agreed actions are taken-forward. Later, however, when the animals suggest sharing their pie, the plate dazzles with mouthwatering brilliance, and hints of red and yellow brighten the next page. She couldn’t remember having seen it before.” Kikko crept to the window and peered inside, just as her father took off his hat and coat. Inside, Kikko finds herself amid an astonishing world — a coterie of animals, seated around a giant table in anticipation of some mysterious festivity. Supplies Plain ceramic mug Bakeable markers or paint Directions Design and color your mug Follow directions on the markers or paint to properly bake on your decoration and make it permanent. But as Kikko goes on to her Grandma’s house alone, the color fades from the animals, highlighting her achievement. But as she breaks into a run to catch up, Kikko trips into the deep snow and falls, crushing the pie box. “You’re just in time.” After the animals seated themselves around a long table, a doe stood, thanked everyone for coming, and asked Kikko to introduce herself. There was agreement, also, on proposals for moving towards a “Socitm Group” type of structure with divisions focussed on different membership interests, such as Web Management or Information Assurance. Upon seeing him go inside, she sneaks up to the window and peeks in. Still, she picked up the box and hurried on. Each piece had a different filling of seeds and nuts and fruit and other delicious things gathered from the woods.” They found a new box, placed the plate inside, and tied it with a red ribbon. And then reality slips into the surreal — the coated figure turns out to have been not her father but “a great big bear,” now taking off his hat to greet an elegant doe in a white gown. Japanese children’s book author and artist Akiko Miyakoshi explores this profoundly human impulse with uncommon subtlety and tenderness in The Tea Party in the Woods (public library) — a quietly whimsical modernist fairy tale with the imaginative other-worldliness of Alice in Wonderland, but without Carroll’s flamboyant farcicality; with the red-capped woods-wandering heroine of Little Red Riding Hood, but without the Grimms’ goriness. She watched as her father entered a strange house. “I can still catch up to him,” said Kikko. The animals thought she was very brave, and Kikko began to feel braver herself. And then, slice by slice, they assemble a new pie onto her plate, each made with different berries and nuts gathered from the woods. I guess this situation is another demonstration of the reality we now have to face; our members are under intense pressure in their ‘day jobs’ and it’s only when you can get them away from the office to meetings like this that they’re able to really engage in Socitm’s business; then it’s like letting the genie out of the bottle! We agreed, however, proposals for roughly half of regional meeting content being provided through corporate policy themes, with the remainder representing local priorities. The day finished with a PSMP partners’ meeting, held at the RICS Board Room at 12 Great George Street, which has a terrace overlooking Parliament Square to which, at the conclusion of our meeting, we adjourned for celebratory drinks in the evening sunshine. As the parade marches through the woods, the animals’ red and yellow clothes and musical instruments make a festive party. Akiko Miyakoshi’s reassuring story about a little girl venturing out into strange territory on her own for the first time is a delight. Kikko’s footsteps were the only sound.” Copyright Akiko Miyakoshi, 2015, courtesy of Kids Can Press. When the animals learned that Kikko’s pie had been ruined, they all contributed a piece of their own pie from the party. And so quiet. After he left, Kikko noticed that he had forgotten to take the pie her mother had made for Grandma. Miyakoshi’s stunning black-and-white drawings, done in charcoal and pencil, are gorgeous in their portrayal of the woodland animals and their tea party. International Tea Day was created in 2005 in New Delhi, India to raise awareness within the governments of tea-growing countries of tea workers, their conditions, and their economic contributions. As she steps into Grandma’s house, Kikko looks over her shoulder — but all the animals have disappeared and her world has returned to its familiar winter quietude. Complement The Tea Party in the Woods with another Japanese masterwork of exceptional tenderness: Komako Sakaï’s extraordinary reimagining of The Velveteen Rabbit. Today, the holiday is commemorated widely in tea-growing nations. You can find The Tea Party in the Woods at these booksellers Amazon | Barnes & Noble | Books-a-Million | IndieBound Picture Book Review Grandma and Kikko’s father were surprised to see her. We meet young Kikko, who awakens one morning to find that her father has left for Grandma’s house but has forgotten the pie he was supposed to bring. The woods were very still. Eager to help, Kikko grabs the pie-box and runs after him through the winter wonderland, following his tracks through the woods. Illustrations courtesy of Akiko Miyakoshi / Kids Can Press Socitm’s National Advisory Council, held today at Friends’ House, in Euston, was an interesting affair, described by the Chair, at one point, as “like a Mad Hatter’s Tea Party”, with which I concur! That’s not intended to be in any way derogatory, but reflects the enthusiasm with which the debate was joined. There was some discussion of Directors’ portfolio responsibilities, which are currently being reviewed, and which Steve plans for us to discuss at our next board meeting. The doe packs this combinatorial creation into a new box, carefully ties it with a red ribbon, and hands it to Kikko as the animal party escorts the girl back out into the woods and sends her off with a joyful parade toward Grandma’s house to deliver the magically recovered pie. Carefully, carrying the boxed pie, Kikko followed “her father’s tracks in the fresh snow. Linked to this, nominated Directors should monitor our various representative activities to ensure effective engagement with Government & other key stakeholders, among their other portfolio responsibilities. Spying a coated figure in the distance, Kikko began to run, but she fell in the deep snow, crushing the pie. Kikko was so excited to bring her Grandma this gift that she wanted to leave right away. The animals cheered and welcomed Kikko enthusiastically. At last, she spots ahead of her a silhouette in a hat and a long black coat.
