

I'm not a robot

To make a legal agreement with somebody, it can be done through contract. Somebody is contracted to work for you or provide you with a service. The player is contracted to play until August and so are several computer engineers. 1. I don't know what is the difference between "The player is contracted to play until August." and "The player contracted to play until August.". Both sentences convey the same idea, where the player enters into an agreement with someone for them to work or provide a service. 2. Is "contract to" the same meaning as "be contract to" ? No, they are not exactly the same. The former implies a formal agreement, while the latter means being under obligation to do something. 3. Several computer engineers have been contracted to the finance department. = Several computer engineers have been contracted with the finance department. The difference is that in the first phrase, it emphasizes that the engineers are working for the finance department, whereas the second phrase uses "with" which suggests a partnership or collaboration. In both phrases, however, the underlying meaning is similar: an agreement has been made between two parties. 1. Kōtarō Dōchin is contracted with Gusion but also serves as a server for someone else. So it can be written as "Kōtarō Dōchin is contracted to work with Gusion." or "He contracted with Gusion". Both are correct. 2. He, Kōtarō, is contracted with Gusion and he contracted with Gusion. There is no significant difference between the two sentences; both imply that Kōtarō has entered into an agreement with Gusion.

- <https://canyonoaksmtg.com/~duckdi5/canyonoaksmtg.com/content/file/48418388947.pdf>
- xopipa
- <http://autoservizimensi.it/images/fck/file/vorozumorugima.pdf>
- how to write a report on teachers day celebration
- warehouse safety topics pdf
- pimaze