Jana, a former lawyer from Switzerland, turned to online learning to discover new interests, including a renewed enthusiasm for Shakespeare after enrolling at the Shakespeare's Life and Work at HarvardX. Read on to discover how his learning experience inspired a new chapter in his life as a Shakespearean writer and educator. Which eX course or program did you take and what were your goals in taking it? The first course I took was the HarvardX Life course and Shakespeare's work. Living in Switzerland, in a non-English country, was my first real meeting with the Bard. As I really enjoyed the course, then I decided to enroll at the Harvard Shakespeare's Outsiders XSeries Program where we studied three works, including Hamlet, the Mercante of Venice, and Otello. My main goal was to get a vision of some of Shakespeare's works, mainly for my personal interest. How was your online learning experience? Online learning has proven to be an impressive experience. A lawyer for education, I stopped working more than 10 years ago to raise my children and as they are growing older, I have more time to plan a new professional experience. Online learning provides all the flexibility I seek and access to subjects that would otherwise be difficult to study in the city I live. The courses were extremely well designed and easily understandable. Their various formats were both educational and fun. How did he affect your career, your life or your community? My learning experience has had a great impact on my life to the extent that it triggered my requalification and helped me find a starting point to do so. I can't wait to enroll in any other eX courses related to Shakespeare. How do you plan to use your learning in the future? What's more for you? The course and the program I took gave me the incentive to continue my journey to Shakespeare's study, in deepening my knowledge of his work, as well as historical and political origins that prevailed in the Elizabethan and Jacobean eras. My last goal is to teach or write articles on specific aspects of Shakespeare's work. What advice would you give to new eX students? The advice I would give is to assign enough time to get most of the courses. Further personal research in relation to the content of the courses enrich the subjects studied. Inspired by Jana's story? So they said friends and colleagues when Roxanne Coady left New York in 1989 to open a bookstore in a small town. I looked to her. She had been one of the Accountant taxes in the country. It was whipped, guided and tireless Â € ª, ~ "Â € ª, ~" 52 different boards, Â € ª, ~ "how do you like, which is just a slight exaggeration. It was even grown in business : Like a girl, she held the books for her father's bakeries. Â € ª, ~ "If you had to choose a dream person to start your library, it would be Roxanne," says Friend and Connecticut Public Radio Host Host Faith Middleton. Â € ª, ~ "so intelligent on the business. The coadion has almost demonstrated all wrong. For the first years, RJ Julia Independent Libreria, located on the main dragination of Madison, Connecticut, raised by giant steps. The growth im - Pressive, however, obscured a docttric incapacity to transform a profit. Coady says he ignored the budgets and Â € ª, ~ â "BlewW probably $ 250,000 â ª, ~ of the money you and her husband, a former real estate developer, He had saved. It was twice what he should have invested, but could not resist going to all the free wine and food to the book signatures, elegant extra-restricted bags and excessive bonuses. But as a bookstore and a lover of the book, you let her heart take over. She built the most attractive library that she could imagine, neglecting to build a sustainable activity. Â € ª, ~ "Now, Â € ª, ~ " says you, Â € ª, ~ â ª, ~ â ª, ~ â ª, ~ "I am combining your head and heart. Thirteen, after changing dramatically careers, Coady, 54, showed that she after all she could get him out. At the same time when almost the half of the independent libraries in the country has closed, R.J. Julia reached more than $ 3 million in annual sales and a modest profit. And coopy, his owner always trendy, in court, and animated, made the transition from successful accountant to successful bookseller. A library waiting for a passion for reading APCECADEY for reading and its talent for accounting have been inspired by the parents of her, who survived the Holocaust and immigrants in the United States in 1948, settles in the eastern side of the Lower East from New York. Even if she had mother of her still had to understand English, she still read her sons of her, pronouncing her words about her. Once Coady has learned to read, she wanted to face every book of children in the library in alphabetical order. When she was in middle school, her father of her, a baker, bought the first of 10 bakeries, called em, and took her to a meeting with his accountant. "What is the accountant? Â ª, ~ the accountant asked ... Â ª, ~ " his father replied. He wasn't joking. The accountant agreed to teach teaching to her, and coopy, the oldest of six. The disguise school, the duties of the sixtial family and paying books until it started the college. Â € ª, ~ "Now my father feels I work too hard, Â € ª, ~ "she says, laughing. Â € ª, ~, "he says." I can't drive two horses with a ass. "I say, Â € ª, ~ ~ Daddy, this is what grew up to do. Â ª, ~ â ª, ~ € 80s, COADY had become a partner and a national national tax BDO Seidman, the international accounting firm in New York. She was the first woman selected for work. "People tell me now, "It must have been boring to work with taxes," Coady says. "But I loved her." He had a 12th floor corner office overlooking Central Park and was doing about $250,000 a year. In 1988, she was featured on the cover of Money magazine, which nicknamed her "accountant". Headstroke, to be sure. But it wasn't enough to keep her there. "As much as I liked the job, it was not enriching," says Coady. "It was in terms of dollars, but it was not enriching to my heart." At least not the way books were always. Even when he climbed the corporate scale, Coady remained an insatiable reader. He always brought a novel with her, stealing moments in a taxi, on the train, everywhere. He always had favorite titles for his friends. "I managed a small library from my house," he says. "People would say, "Oh, man, this was the best book you gave me." "They were telling you something. It was time to change. The creation of a modern city GreenR.J. Julia, called for Coady's grandmother, Julia, who lost in a concentration camp in World War II, is much more than a store where you buy the last Harry Potter or John Grisham. It is a local institution that has become interwoven with people's lives as few enterprises are. "It's the heart of the community," says Norman Weissman, retired writer, director and producer who lives in nearby Guilford and attends a monthly book club meetings in R.J. Julia. "The library and the city are inseparable." Residents of the area feel responsible for supporting the independent library — their library — although it means paying a little more sometimes. From the beginning, Coady wanted R.J. Julia to be a green modern city. "I've heard that people were disconnecting each other," he says. "We lost a public place to talk about things that mattered." The store hosts more than 200 events per year, from book signatures to book club meetings per hour of children's history on Wednesday morning. Through the lobby of publishers and caterers for visiting authors, Coady made Madison, a rich coastal city with 2,200 residents, a regular book-tour stop between New York and Boston. The walls are aligned with dozens of autographed photos of past visitors: Jimmy Carter, Garrison Keillor, and Anne Rice. At Coady's suggestion, Lee Jacobus began a classical literature club at R.J. Julia. Professor emeritus of English at the University of Connecticut, prepares himself as if he is still teaching in a class, reading, analyzing and making notes 40 minutes a day, three days a week. "It's a huge investment of time and, yes, I do it for free," says Jacobus. "But this is an institution that should be supported. It isfor the intellectual life of the city." For R.J. R.J.To stand out in an increasingly crowded market, COADY believes that it should offer unparalleled service and skills. Like their boss, the staff is well bed, which prepares them for Â € ª, ~ "hand sale" — that is, recommending books that their colleagues have read. Â € ª, ~ "This is the Value that we add to the experience of buying books Â € ª, ~ "says Coopy. Â € ª, ~ " We put the right book in the right hands.â € ª, ~ "The sales section of the store is recommendation of the staff, in which every Book is accompanied by a Â € ª, ~ "Shelkalker", a review of the capsule from a bookstore, or in the case of the new Harry Potter, from the son of a library (Â € ª, ~ Â ª, ~ "I â ª, ~ € m 11, and I finished exactly five days, until the hour! Once you start reading it, you won â, ~ T Stop! Â ª, ~ "Raves Hana, the manager's daughter) Suzanne Coopersmith is one of the About 35 library on staff. As a coopy, she is sociable, totally unreserved, and able to talk about books all day. You can't imagine working in a chain, even what comes to Waterford, about 15 miles from where she lives. Â € ª, ~ "There are too many rules," says Coopersmith. Â € ª, ~ "Qualo, I can give a customer discount every time I want. But the staff certainly knows the type of store that wants RJ Julia being. When it comes to sharing sympathies and dislikes, the Coady is an open book. While remembering the staff, he prefers the offer, Â € ª, ~ "me not Know if I can help you, Â € ª, ~ "or you find what you need? Â ª, ~ " I help you? â, ~ hits it as intrusive. For Natalie Ferringer, she was love with RJ Julia on the front page. The dark wood shelves, brass frames, and returns of various signatures of writers painted on the wooden floor give the place where the atmosphere of a neighborhood library in Europe or New York. Ferringer, the head of the political-scientific department of the New Haven university, can spend entire afternoon, which translates between $ 350 and $ 400 of books a month. And yet, it is difficult to say those who benefit more: Ferringer or the Library. Â € ª, ~ "I know them by name, Â € ª, ~ "he says of the staff. Â € ª, ~ "There is Nancy, Karen, Lisa, Suzanne, Meredith, Beth, Babette, Roxanne.Â ª, ~ "Â ª, ~ "The library and the city are inseparable." Perhaps the best measure of RJ The report of Julia with its customers comes from Denise Harrington, an avid murder-mystery reader and a customer from the beginning. During a recent visit, he collected a special order, the slim woman, a Leggeric British, a ragged British, written by Dorothy Cannell and originally published in 1984. What were noteworthy of his purchase is that Harrington never requested the book. In fact, he had never even heard either. Â € ª, ~ "The Asuzanne has it For me without my knowledge, Â € ª, ~, "he says." I knew he loved him. Â € ª, ~, "says coopersmith.she coopersmith.she Roxanne EffectWhen Coady launched R.J. Julia, Madison, like many small towns, was in decline. "After the opening, the theatre, the hardware store, the hardware store, the restaurant were all closed", she says. "I thought, "What did I just do?" Now, Madison is a different story. Although the business district is only one block along Boston Post Road, across from R.J. Julia there is an art house and an elegant Italian restaurant. There are a variety of shops and boutiques. There's also a Starbucks.As an entrepreneur, Coady has come a long way. He runs R.J. Julia as a company, with a budget, a training manual and more structured assessments. Coincidentally, his son Edward and the store were born in the same year. Since their 13th birthday this year, Coady says, both have had their bar mitzvahs: Edward has become a man, R.J. Julia a mature company.In reality, however, adding corporate discipline to the bookstore remains a challenge, especially without the financial incentives it had at its disposal from a large accounting firm. Coady provides an informal and fun environment in which booksellers can be passionate. They constantly remind you that the keyword in the independent library is independent. When Coady tried to get the staff to wear R.J. Julia's T-shirts, they refused. So he bought R.J. Julia buttons that no one wore for a long time. A new box of R.J. Julia's green laces in the office could be next. "This is where the democracy thing hits my feet", he says.Coady's natural effusiveness and love of writing, reads about six books at a time, makes it an irresistible bookstore. Slowly, our sales increase by 20%, says store manager Meredith Warner. Faith Middleton, the radio host, experiences the Roxanne Effect twice a month when Coady appears on her book talk show. Recently, while describing the history of the family, Dani Shapiro's novel about a mother's attempts to save her broken family, "My hair has risen up behind my neck", says Middleton. "You could hear a pin falling in the studio."This passion infuses every square metre of R.J. Julia, and every gram of its owner. When Coady thought about a career change, she figured running a bookstore would be a change of pace, less challenging for her than being an executive at a large company. "I often joke about giving up money for the time, and now I don't have any", she says. It's still Type A, so it's not surprising that running a successful library isn't enough. He is currently expanding the children's section, renovating the gift shop area and drawing up a business plan to take the brand in new directions.A second R.J. Julia? A chain of stores? Coady can't say. What It still has to be written.Sidebar: 5 Big Readings â ª, ~ "Everyone has time for a discretionary thing", says Roxanne Coady, the owner and owner R.J.
