The idea of removing my left wing and cutting the end from my table saw the rails to install it makes me uneasy. I am curious if someone installed their sliding table without cutting the rails and how they found this option. Even wondering if someone who cut off the end of their railroad was ever able to put it back on (I guess it should be welded). Any more thoughts on the installation would be welcome Graham London ON Thread Read more... King: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation You have enough space in your store to move the rails right far enough to clear the table It may be necessary to pierce some new mounting holes, but that would be preferable to cut them, and it also gives you more tear capacity to the right of the blade. I'm just responsible for what I say, not for what you understand. If you can't solve solve with a hahmmer, you have an electrical problem. King: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation I recently installed a used Excalibur on my General 350. I plowed without the manual for a while. I thought I should pull the left wing. Otherwise your likely drilling and hitting new holes. I didn't like trying to punch and forge the holes in my mounting rail... So I got my angle grinder for them. It took some time as they were 1/4" thick... And my grinder disc was worn to almost nothing. I worked fine. Sent by my GT-N7105 using Tapatalk 2 Re: Excalibur Sliding Table Install Drill the wing and mount it there. I followed the directions, but hated the left loss of the blade fence settings. I put the wing back, I used it like this for 15 years before upgrading to a TS slider. woodworking sigpic hobby 1972 Re: Excalibur sliding table Installation Did I understand that you ground the cracks in your mounting rail instead of drilling and counter-intelligence holes? If so, I'd question your logic about this approach. I hope I misread this post... sigpic[SIGPIC] Marty Schlosser Fine wood shaving manufacturer in Kingston, ON and member of the Kingston Woodworkers Association (www.KingstonWoodworkers.ca) Re: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation No no... I used my grinder to cut the left end of my flush rails at the edge of the table with the left wing removed. I didn't have anything else to do the job with. The corner iron is often quarter of an inch. Sent by my GT-N7105 using Tapatalk 2 wire Read more... King: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation I had an Excaliber sliding table years ago. And he took off his wing, and cut off the rail, and he will never regret it. I never found a problem with him. He was on a Unisaw. Brian If your dreams don't scare you, you're not dreaming big enough King: Excalibur Sliding Table Install Hi Graham..... I left the train full on my Unisaw too. Room's not a problem in my shop. You may find the sliding table running a bit rough after a while. Good cleaning on the bearings will smooth the ride again! King: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation I started working at a store that has that table attached to a DeWalt TS. I noticed someone just made spacers out of the square tube, so nothing on the TS needed to be cut. That said, I have never been happy with the accuracy of the Excalibur the way it is configured and I have removed the aluminum fence so it acts only as an extension to the table. Last update from workshopo; 12.09.2013, 01:56 PM. King: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation Thank you, I will try to install it without removing the left wing but I expect it will have enough You'll see if I can move the rail right but agree that plundering the ruler would be a pain In which case I think I will cut the rail (thanks I have a metal saw). Looks like you don't come back once the rail is cut. Graham Re: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation I also have an Industrial saw-stop, took off the wing and cut the rail. I did.Running from where I might have used the room leak on the left side, I had to make a mask to make my cut not great deal. Keep in mind that I feel like the closer to the sliding table it is to the blade, the better it is, when it comes to safety. I did exactly as you said, he took off the guide and used a metal saw. I also mounted it as far as possible on the side of the saw, I have 49" at the front of the blade thus allowing a full sheet to go through and still keep the fence on the back. Thread continues under ... Ri: Excalibur Sliding Table Install YES I was facing the same dilemma with my Jessem. Here's a link to my post. Sawstop Slider Mods Re: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation Thanks Randy Read your post - In your last post you mentioned the schedule to put a new rule from Lee Valley, how did it go out? GRAHAM RE: Excalibur Sliding Table Installation originally published by Greid View Post Thanks Randy Read your post - In your last post you mentioned planning to put a new rule by Lee Valley as it went out? Graham as good as new. I also added the Wixy digital fence gauge. I also like that, mainly used for incremental fence movements as you can set zero anywhere. Re: Excalibur Sliding Table Install Hey, Randy. Before getting my new slider, I did the same thing (except I was the first buyer) and mounted a Jessem to my UNISEW. I found an excellent crosscutting system in the small shop I had at the time and I used it to build a set of kitchen cabinets and a lot of furniture. He convinced me that if I ever moved again I would have a bigger store and a dedicated sliding saw. I would suggest to everyone that once you have had a high quality slide on your pliers, you will never return to a unit without sliding. I'm surprised more writers on this side of the pond haven't jumped on the slider carriage. Most likely it is because of the problem of costs and the need to dedicate a large amount of space to the cursor.
