(Image credit: Namerah Saud Fatmi / Android Central) I don't know about you but I'm a real sucker for traditional writing mediums. When it comes to technology, my love for writing takes the form of styli, dedicated writing and drawing tablets, and handwriting input modes for my devices. If you're anything like me and find comfort in the handwritten form of text input, you'll be pleased to learn about the handwriting feature on Gboard. Using it is as easy as it sounds. Here's how you can set up and use Gboard's handwriting feature.

1. Open any messaging or writing app where you can type to open Gboard.2. Tap the gear icon in Gboard to open settings.3. Tap Languages.(Image credit: Namerah Saud Fatmi / Android Central)4. Tap the language that you want to write in.5. Choose the Handwriting input option.6. Tap Done.(Image credit: Namerah Saud Fatmi / Android Central)7. Go back to the app where you can type to access Gboard.8. Press and hold the spacebar.9. Choose the handwriting version of your language's keyboard. (Image credit: Namerah Saud Fatmi / Android Central)10. Use your finger to draw the characters onto the handwriting keyboard.

The handwriting version of Gboard is available to select languages. This means if you don't see the handwriting keyboard appear next to the usual QWERTY input method, Gboard doesn't have that option for your language. Google is constantly adding support for more languages though, so be sure to keep an eye out if your language isn't there.

As for the matter of how well this feature works, I can assure you that the English handwriting keyboard is fantastic. Fellow cursive users such as myself will be pleased to know that our wonky, loopy penmanship is deciphered aptly by Gboard. Should you tire of using your fingers, you can always pick up a great stylus for Android phones and tablets to up your writing game.

Gboard and its hidden trove of useful features

Many little tips and tricks of Gboard are buried deep within the keyboard. To make the most out of your typing experience, pause for a moment and take a good look at all of Gboard's options. Some of the features might surprise you. For instance, you can access Bitmoji right out of the Google keyboard. This saves you the hassle of switching to the dedicated Bitmoji keyboard or app just to send a sticker.

Then there's the nifty clipboard feature in Gboard that makes life so easy. Learn how to use it and you'll become a much more efficient Android user. The Gboard clipboard can store text and images. You get the option to pin items, allowing you to store copied pictures of bits of text indefinitely. What with the floating keyboard option, the built-in Google Translate snippet, and the extensive keyboard themes available, there is a lot to uncover in Gboard.

Google on Wednesday released a new input app named Google Handwriting Input for Android smartphones and tablets. Like a keyboard app, once enabled, the app allows for handwriting input across other apps.

As the name suggests, the app lets users input both words and emojis by hand-drawing the words or shapes. The app supports 82 languages in 20 distinct scripts and says it can be mainly useful for "languages that can be challenging to type on a standard keyboard."

The Google Handwriting Input app also works with printed and cursive writing input, even without a stylus. The app by default uses Google's light teal colour scheme, which users can also change to dark theme. Option to choose from local or cloud-based handwriting recognition is also included.

The app is sized at 11.83MB, works with Android 4.0.3 Ice Cream Sandwich and later OS versions, and is already available for download from Google Play.

Talking about keyboard apps, last month Fleksy announced that it will be fully free for Samsung Galaxy S6 and Galaxy S6 Edge owners and will also include full keyboard functionality and premium themes, which together cost $10.

SwiftKey in February this year introduced emoji prediction for iOS devices, introduced key-click sounds alongside the support for 11 additional languages. Swype on the other hand, introduced Android 5.0 Lollipop-based themes (Light, Dark and Bumble Bee), detachable keyboard for Android tablet users, new languages and more.

Also, included was the emoji support in eight languages. Some of the other features added were Korean initial consonant, performance improvements related to connected services, and few bug fixes.

I am developing an android app which gets user handwriting on the screen and write that as a text in editText field of android. I have used gesture recognition before but that not gets too far as I have discussed in some of my other post. But that post didn't answered me well here. So now, I want to use google handwriting input as my writing keyboard without installing their keyboard manually. Inshort, all I need is to attach google's handwriting input keyboard to my app and use it as user installs my app on android device. Is there any solution to the problem?

Google debuted Android Wear 2.0 at Google I/O last year with a number of great new features, not least of which was a clever spin on the handwriting keyboard. Oddly, the handwriting keyboard was left buried in a hard to find location and had to be activated just to use it. Now that the official Wear 2.0 release is rolling out (kinda), users have reported that this keyboard didn't even come preinstalled, nor could it be found on the Play Store - at least, not until yesterday. The Handwriting Keyboard is now available. Since we've all been waiting for Wear 2.0 to launch, it's easy to forget a sleeper like the Handwriting Keyboard. Unfortunately, without a version of it preinstalled, the Play Store won't notify people that it's available and most people won't realize they don't have it. Note: Some watches shipping with Wear 2.0, like the LG Watch Style and Sport, do have the Handwriting Keyboard preinstalled. In some cases, the handwriting keyboard still did not work with the shipping version, but we're not really sure what was causing this problem. If you've been fortunate enough to get the 2.0 update on your watch, or at least will be getting it soon, you can install the Handwriting Keyboard from the Play Store on the watch or open the web interface to remotely install it. Alternatively, APK Mirror also has the app (linked below), but some sideloading can be a lot of trouble on some watches, particularly if they are wireless-only. Setting up the Handwriting Keyboard shouldn't require any extra steps like it did on the developer preview, but you may need to know how to switch between keyboards. The first opportunity to do that is available when you're looking at the input picker (left). Long-press on the keyboard icon and you'll see the keyboard picker (center). If you decide to change keyboards mid-typing, you can also tap on the little globe icon at the bottom right of the regular keyboard. The Handwriting Keyboard also has a globe icon located at the bottom center, but it auto-hides once you begin typing. Download The APK is signed by Google and upgrades your existing app. The cryptographic signature guarantees that the file is safe to install and was not tampered with in any way. Rather than wait for Google to push this download to your devices, which can take days, download and install it just like any other APK.
