Slither.io revives the classic snake game concept with a multiplayer twist, placing players in a virtual arena where each controls a colorful, glowing worm with the goal of becoming the longest and most dominant on the server. The gameplay is intuitive yet addictive; players navigate their worm around a vast field, consuming multicolored pellets to grow in size. However, the catch lies in avoiding collisions: if a player's head touches another worm, they lose and must start over. This simple premise is elevated by the presence of other players who can cut you off or encircle you, turning each session into a tactical battle for space and survival. Mastering Tactics and Growing Your Worm As players consume pellets and grow larger, their movement becomes slower, demanding more strategic navigation and foresight. The larger the worm, the greater the target for other players looking to trick you into a fatal collision. Advanced tactics like coiling around smaller worms to trap them become vital as players strive for dominance. Power-ups appear throughout the arena, offering temporary boosts like increased speed or a shield, adding layers of strategy and excitement. Each game round is unpredictable and challenging, as new players continuously join the arena, each aiming to climb the leaderboard. Play against other snakes! You can play slither.io over time.No data shared with third parties can be made of, that can be placed on the worm upon clicking. Previously, in order to unlock custom skins in browser mode, players were forced to share the game on Twitter or Facebook using the external links found on the website. By June 2016, the ability to add skins was also added to the iOS and Android versions.[7] According to game creator Steven Howse, he was inspired to create the game while he was experiencing financial problems. As a result of these financial issues, he had to move from Minneapolis to Michigan, where he realized the popularity of 'Agar.io'.[8] He had long wanted to create an online multiplayer game, but Adobe Flash was the only development option at the time, but not wanting to use this method, he paused the idea for a while. Howse finally created the game when he realized that WebSocket, a low-latency protocol supported by most major browsers, was sufficient and stable enough to run an HTML game similar to other games such as Agar.io.[9] The most difficult part of the development was in making each server stable enough to handle 600 players at a time. Howse struggled to find space on servers with enough space in regions where there was more demand and tried to avoid cloud services like Amazon Web Services, owing to the high cost that these services would incur based on the amount of bandwidth used.[8][9] After six months of development, Slither.io was released for browsers and iOS on March 25, 2016, with servers supporting up to 500 players.[10][11] Two days after the iOS/browser versions' release, an Android version was made available by Lowtech Studios.[12] The only way Howse could make revenue was to display advertising in the app after the player's worm died; this option could be removed for US$3.99. He chose not to sell virtual currency or power-ups so that those who mid would not have an advantage over players who did not.[8] As there was no money to advertise for the game, the only way to promote the game was the various let's plays by players on YouTube, including PewDiePie, who had more than 47 million subscribers at the time.[8][2] The success of the game would cause Raw Thrills to develop an arcade version a few years later.[13][14] In the weeks following the release, Howse worked on updates to stabilize the game and provide a better experience for players.[15][16] In addition, he plans to add new features, such as a "friendly mode" that allows people to set up teams, and a way for the player to choose a server to play on.[9] Howse said that two major gaming companies had approached him to buy Slither.io. He had considered the idea, since he felt that it was stressful to maintain the game.[8] Soon after release, Slither.io reached the top of the App Store sales charts in the free software category in several regions,[17] including the United States[18] and the United Kingdom.[19] By the end of 2016, Slither.io had become Google's most searched video game of the year in the United States.[20] Philana Hernandez of Kotaku said that the game's low barriers to entry and similarity to Agar. io explained Slither. io's popularity. She noted the game's fast pace.[2] Boing Boing compared the game's core mechanic to that of the 2009 game Osmos.[21] Brandt Ran, writing for Business Insider, said that "despite running into some technical hiccups—the game can lag heavily at times—I doubt Slither.io will be leaving my home screen anytime soon."[4] Harry Slater, writing for Pocket Gamer, defined the game as "interesting", the gameplay as a "compulsive experience", and the structure as simple and similar to Agar.io, although it did not have a large replay value.[22] TechCrunch's Felicia Williams praised the designs, getting "pleasantly surprised" with the variety of skins for customization.[23] Lian Amaris of Gamezebo found the game to be "far more interesting than Agar.io" because it involved "an ever-growing languid body rather than just a flat circle", and praised "the dark environment with neon worms," which gave the game a "retro arcade feel." Amaris also compared the concept of Slither.io to that of Agar.io and stated that Slither.io was reminiscent of the classic arcade game Snake.[1] Shortly after the release of the mobile versions, the game was in first place in the ranking of games of the App Store.[23][24] Despite Slither.io's popularity, it received mixed reviews. Scottie Rowland of Android Guys praised the gameplay and graphics but criticized the ads that pop up on the screen after the end of the game, calling them "extremely annoying", and finding the payment to remove them "a bit pricey".[25] By July 2016, the browser version website was ranked by Alexa as the 250th most visited site worldwide, but then experienced a decline in popularity, dropping below 1,000 by October 2016 before remaining mostly constant at approximately 1,700 by January 2017. In April 2017, Slither.io's global rank then started declining further, reaching 2,800 by September 2017.[26] By that same period, the game had already been downloaded more than 68 million times in mobile applications and played more than 67 million times in browsers, generating a daily income of US$100,000 for Howse.[8][11] Snake.io Snaky Cat ^ Sometimes called or pronounced "slitherio" (/ˈslɪðəriˌoʊ/) and "slither" ^ The default colors are orange, yellow, purple, lavender, teal, green, chartreuse, brick, pink, red, and white.[6] ^ a b c Amaris, Lian (April 11, 2016). The players controlling the snakes, though... They'll try to get you. Enjoy this twist on the classic snake genre with Slither.io! Like the classic game Snake that was available on cell phones and computers for decades, you grow by eating small pellets. But Slither.io introduces a multiplayer element that changes the playing field entirely. Eat and Grow The glowing orbs are your key to sustenance. By eating them, you increase the snake's size and gain more energy for boosting. The bigger the snake, the better your chance to trap other snakes You start the game small, so don't try taking on the big boys until you've grown more powerful. Work on the strategy of eating and avoiding until you've acquired enough size to take on smaller snakes. Boost Your Speed Boost is an important feature, but it comes at the cost of your size. This method can be used when you are racing against snakes, once you have the perfect spot near the opponent's head, make a sudden cut to eliminate it. Use the boost wisely to ensure you get maximum value for the cost. Special Orbs Besides the regular orbs that are widely available around the map, there are two special orbs. When a snake dies, they drop all of their glowing pellets. The bigger the snake that falls, the more plentiful the harvest. Finding these orbs early can grow your snake quickly. The other special orbs can occasionally be found floating around the arena. These floating orbs will run away if you chase them, but it is worth more than the average dots around, so it may be worth pursuing. Capture Other Snakes Once you acquire adequate size, you can circle around smaller snakes, trapping them and tightening your grip, much like a regular snake would. If your size becomes gargantuan, you can even catch a multitude of small snakes, leading to their inevitable demise and more nourishment for you!
